

Judge Duff McKee is a district court judge on senior status, with a private practice limited to alternative dispute resolution services. He is a graduate of the University of Idaho College of Law and has been an active member of the bar for almost 53 years. The last 32 years have been devoted to judicial service and facilitating negotiated settlements of civil lawsuits. He was honored by the bar with its professionalism award in 2011. He lives and practices in Boise, and is a fifth generation resident of Idaho.

Judge McKee is the author of “Mediation Mechanisms; Distributive Negotiation in Litigation,” a book released by Ridenbaugh Press in 2017. Premised on the concept that settlement negotiations are as much a process as the trial itself, with discrete strategies and methods that can be learned, honed and practiced by any competent trial lawyer, the book analyzes and explains each of the steps and processes necessary to the resolution of a civil lawsuit, whether through direct negotiation or mediation. The book available on line through Amazon.com, or from the publisher at www.ridenbaughpress.com.
